Historical Sketch

Shortly after graduating from high school in 1924, Lee Strelau of LaSalle and several of his friends began making unlicensed radio broadcasts from the Hummer Furniture Store in LaSalle, Illinois. They persuaded Wayne Hummer to apply for a license to broadcast, and they were granted one by U.S. Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover in the name of the Hummer Furniture Company in 1925. They were given permission to broadcast at 100 watts at a wavelength of 1280 kilocycles and were assigned the call letters WJBC. Strelau used the letters to create the slogan "Where Jazz Becomes Classic" for the radio station and his business, Lee Strelau's Radio and Victrola Shop. The inaugural broadcast, which included a speech by the mayor of the city, was praised in the May 5, 1925 edition of a LaSalle paper, which reported that the Hummer store was flooded with calls congratulating the entrepreneurs. In the next few years, the Federal Radio Commission would reassign WJBC to a new wavelength twice, first to 1320 kilocycles in 1927, on which they shared time with stations WWAE and WCLO, and then to 1200 kilocycles, shared with WJBL, a year later.

In 1928, the fledgling radio station was moved from the Hummer Furniture Store to LaSalle's Kaskaskia Hotel, where it remained until 1934. Prompted by the strain of the Depression, which closed Strelau's shop and slowed business for Hummer's Furniture Store, Hummer moved WJBC to Normal, providing Bloomington-Normal with its first licensed radio station. While WJBC's transmitter was located in Normal, its main studios were at Illinois Wesleyan University, with other studios located at Illinois State Normal University and the Farm Bureau building. It made its first broadcast from its new home on September 11, 1934. Initially, WJBC only made its broadcasts from 9:00 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 3:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m., except on Sundays, when broadcasts ran from 8:00 a.m. to 10:00 a.m. and from 3:30 p.m. to 6:00 p.m. The first broadcasts featured news, weather reports, announcements of farm sales, and Western Union time every hour on the hour. Within a month of its arrival in Bloomington, the station was approached by Reverend Reuben J. Zehr. After an initial thirteen week Sunday program, he became a fixture at WJBC, making daily, fifteen-minute religious broadcasts for more than thirty-five years, during which time he never missed a show. The station also included musical and educational programs in its broadcasts, as well as Illinois Wesleyan University athletic events.

Arthur and Dorothy McGregor purchased WJBC in 1936, and the station was given permission by the FCC to increase its daytime power to 250 watts. Its new owners not only installed a new, 191 foot tall transmitter in Normal, but also acquired a mobile remote transmitter that allowed the station to broadcast important events on location. This technology allowed the station to broadcast President Franklin D. Roosevelt's speech to thousands of listeners when he came to the area that same year seeking reelection. The station also began innovative programs during this time, such as its "Man-on-the-Street" segments in which WJBC reporters interviewed local residents, broadcasting their opinions from the sidewalk in front of Bloomington's Biasi Drugs. Local radio personalities of this period included Stanley Lantz, an announcer who would become WJBC's program director in 1940 before moving on to the position of Farm Editor of The Pantagraph, and Campbell "Stretch" Miller, a former ISNU basketball player who became a sports reporter for the station.

WJBC continued developing over the next few years, getting approval from the FCC in 1939 to expand its programming to cover 16 hours a day. The station made daily broadcasts from 6:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. on weekdays and Saturdays, and Sunday broadcasts ran from 8:00 a.m. to 10:00 p.m. These broadcasts included news, music, theater, programs for women, and religious programs. In 1941, Hugh Gately entered into a partnership with the McGregors, and WJBC moved to new studios on the third floor of the Castle Theatre building that featured windows through which the public could view broadcasts. In March of the same year, WJBC was assigned for the last time to a new wavelength, this time 1230 kilocycles.

In 1945, NBC's "Blue Network" was spun off to become the American Broadcasting Company (ABC), of which WJBC was a charter member. In addition to its local features and personalities, WJBC began broadcasting network programs like "Adventures of Ozzie and Harriet," "Terry and the Pirates," and "The Breakfast Club." These network programs also brought in national advertisements during this period, but WJBC's primary source of revenue continued to be local advertisers. The Pantagraph bought WJBC from Gately and the McGregors in 1946, appointing Warner Tiedman as the station's manager. At this point the license for the station was assigned to the Bloomington Broadcasting Corporation (BBC). The Pantagraph also launched a second, FM radio station in 1947, known as WJBC-FM. Initially, this station duplicated WJBC programming, broadcasting on channel 268 at 101.5 megacycles. It would be officially licensed on March 26, 1951, and later become known as WBNQ in 1967. In 1949 WJBC's 400-foot tall radio tower was constructed on Bloomington's southwest side, near Route 66.

The arrival of television in Bloomington during the early 1950s posed a challenge for WJBC, and in response the radio station began making the focus of its programs more local. As a part of this move, the popular "Problems and Solutions" program, in which calls from listeners were aired, was begun by program director Fred Muxfeld in 1953. Jerry Collins, Don Newberg, Bill Walberg, and Jerry Holtz would all serve as hosts of the program, but beginning in 1971, it would be hosted by Steve Vogel, who remained with the program longer than anyone before or since. The program itself was the longest running telephone talk show in the United States, lasting forty-two years, and became one of the cornerstones of WJBC. Over the years, the program expanded from calls regarding household problems, lost pets, and similar concerns to include shows in which listeners had the opportunity to call in and question guests ranging from UFO experts to pediatricians. In one noteworthy "Problems and Solutions" show, women's rights activist Betty Friedan and anti-ERA leader Phyllis Schlafly met face-to-face for the first time. However, even as the scope of the show expanded, it also maintained the local community as its principle focus. In 1956, Loring Merwin, one of the owners of The Pantagraph, sold fifty percent of WJBC and the then WJBC-FM to Leslie C. Johnson, general manager of the Rock Island Broadcasting Company. Johnson then sold twenty-five percent of the company to Vernon A. Nolte, who came to Bloomington to take over the management of WJBC. Also in 1956, Tim Ives, part of the Stevenson family that owned The Pantagraph, joined the radio station, becoming station manager a few years later. Ives would also serve a term as president of the National Radio Broadcasters Association.

Other changes at WJBC during this decade impacted the entire radio industry. During the 1950s, local radio transitioned from what Professor David T. MacFarland called in his 1979 paper on the subject (item 1.1.20) “a medium offering long, discrete programs to one offering a single, continuous program made up of many short pieces.” This “music-and-news” or “Top Forty” format required a means for broadcasters to quickly play short program elements, and the necessary innovation came in the form of the endless loop tape cartridge developed by WJBC engineers Ted Bailey and Jack Jenkins. They showcased their invention at the 1959 convention of the National Association of Broadcasters, where it was an instant success, allowing the format and pace of radio to change dramatically. Other technical changes for the station also came about in the 1960s. In 1961 the FCC gave WJBC permission to increase its daytime power to 1000 watts while continuing to broadcast at night at 250 watts. The following year WJBC was permitted to increase its power to 50,000 watts and began programming in stereo.

In April of 1965, Don Munson took over the WJBC morning show at the age of twenty-three. He spent the next thirty-five years running this show, giving him the distinction of having more broadcasts than anyone else in the station’s history. He later became the station’s program director and operations manager in 1972. During the blizzard of January 25, 1967, WJBC played a crucial role in maintaining communication between separated families, dropping its normal programming and instead airing phone calls from people reporting whether they were stranded or safe. WJBC remained on air throughout the night rather than signing off at midnight, and their response to the storm drew acclaim from numerous individuals and businesses in the form of thank-you letters and newspaper articles. WJBC offered its first “Great Escape” to listeners in 1967 as well, taking them on a winter vacation to the Bahamas, and the vacation destinations of following years would include places ranging from London to Australia. WJBC also sponsored community events like the Great Piano Marathon, the Great Race, and the Great WJBC Air Show during the late 1960s, and participated in charity and fundraising events, like the benefit basketball game set up to aid the widow and children of Jay Heitmann, a young football coach at Central Catholic High School who died of cancer. This game pitted coaches from Bloomington-Normal against members of the local media, including WJBC’s Don Munson.

The station built new studios around its radio tower on Greenwood Avenue in 1970, and the Bloomington Broadcasting Corporation began expanding in the 1970s, acquiring the station WGBF in Evansville, IN in 1972. Don Newberg left WJBC to become station manager of this new acquisition, and Don Munson replaced him as WJBC’s operations manager. This was the first of numerous acquisitions for BBC, which would include stations from Tennessee, Michigan, and South Carolina. The company would ultimately own 21 radio stations by 2000.

In 1976, Arbitron named WJBC as the radio station with the largest audience share in the nation, drawing 39.1% of listeners. It would remain first or second in the nation for over a decade. That year, the station adopted its slogan “The Spirit of McLean County,” and in 1977 it instituted its annual “Spirit of McLean County” award to recognize local leaders. During the 1970s, station employee Sandy Scott was the primary organizer of many WJBC-sponsored events and contests, such as the State of Illinois Monopoly Tournament, the Illinois Pinball Championship Series, and the WJBC Amateur Minute talent competition. Sandy Scott also started the “WJBC Action Line” in 1977, where volunteers from the League of Women Voters took calls from listeners with consumer or governmental problems. This decade also marked the beginning of the WJBC

Brotherhood Tree, which began as an effort by the station's employees to spruce up the office Christmas tree by adding a few gifts to its base that were taken to needy families after the holiday. In the following years, however, the event expanded as listeners were invited to participate, and it ultimately grew into a project that included hundreds of volunteers and served thousands of people in need. A new announcer, Paul Dunn, joined WJBC in 1972, and he would take part in numerous promotional events in the years to come. In 1975, for instance, he rode his bike around Central Illinois as Paul "Revere" Dunn, broadcasting his show from the towns he passed through and building support for the Walk for Mankind. 1975 also saw the beginning of WJBC's popular program "WJBC's Forum," a program designed by Don Munson and based on the Chicago radio program "Spectrum." On "WJBC's Forum," ten volunteers from the community with diverse views spoke on air, eliciting discussion among broadcasters and listeners alike. Other notable WJBC employees of the time included Sports Director Art Kimball, Farm Director Art Sechrest, nighttime host Dan Swaney, reporter Rod Neaveill, and afternoon personality Stew Salowitz.

The 1980s were considered by station manager Don Munson to be the "best of times for WJBC," with WJBC's audience share reaching 40.8% in 1982. That same year, Judy Markowitz, who would later become mayor of Bloomington, was hired as promotions director at WJBC. She was one of the organizers of a project in which WJBC collected shoes from local residents and donated them to Poland in order to help the Polish people through the coming winter, an event for which the station was recognized by the Polish American Congress. The station and its employees received numerous awards during this time, including the "National Headliner Award" in 1985 for outstanding local news radio coverage. Sunday show host Gene Lyle was recognized by the National Religious Broadcasters Association in 1981, and WJBC's Farm Director Art Schrest won several national agriculture journalism awards, later becoming president of the National Association of Farm Broadcasters in 1982. Don Munson won Normal's "Outstanding Citizen" award in 1981 and was nominated for the Marconi award in 1989. Although the award went to someone else that year, he won it when he was nominated a second time two years later.

WJBC was often among the first to cover significant local news stories during this period, as well. Steve Vogel interviewed David Hendricks in November of 1983 less than a day after the murder of Hendricks' family, a crime Hendricks would later be charged with. Vogel also anchored a live broadcast in Detroit where plans for building a new auto plant just west of Bloomington-Normal were first officially announced. The effectiveness of WJBC's news coverage during the 1980s was enhanced by the presence of talented and focused reporters like Adam Nielsen, L. P. Philips, and Howard Packowitz. WJBC announcers also sometimes took stands on controversial issues in current events, such as when Don Munson spoke against the proposal in 1990 to tear down the historic buildings on the block south of the courthouse and redevelop the area.

However, the 1980s and 1990s were also a period of great change for the station, particularly in its staff. In 1984, Timothy Ives hired Richard Johnson as Bloomington Broadcasting Company's treasurer and general manager of WJBC and WBNQ. News anchor Alan Sender left in 1988, Judy Markowitz in 1992, and Steve Vogel in 1993. Art Sechrest also had to leave the station after suffering a major stroke in 1994. The Bloomington Broadcasting Corporation as a whole saw great changes as well, primarily in ownership. Prompted in part by the deregulation, which encouraged consolidation in the radio industry and thus increased the value of radio properties, the Ives, Merwin, and Stevenson families that were the primary stockholders of BBC sold the company to a group of venture capitalists in Boston in 1998. These new owners sought to decrease expenses, and the day after the company changed hands, four employees were let go. BBC was sold again in January of 2000 to Citadel Broadcasting, a company headquartered in Las Vegas that owns more than 200 radio stations. This change in ownership again resulted in further cutbacks of employees, and in 2004 Citadel Broadcasting transferred control of its three Bloomington stations to Regent Communications, a Kentucky-based company. Don Munson had stepped down as station manager in the late 1990s, but he continued to host the morning show for three and a half more years before finally retiring after thirty-five years of broadcasting on January 28, 2000, when Scott Laughlin replaced him. Munson also won the “Spirit of McLean County” award in 2000 in recognition of his years serving the community through his work at WJBC and later wrote a book about his experiences at WJBC, Morning Was My Middle Name.

Although its location, form, and employees have changed dramatically over the course of the station’s history, WJBC continues to broadcast across Central Illinois, and it still maintains a mix of local and national focus in its programming. During its coverage of the September 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, for instance, WJBC combined coverage of the events in New York with reports of how Bloomington-Normal residents were reacting to the news. Despite the transformations the station has undergone, WJBC remains a significant part of the Bloomington-Normal community and an integral part of its history.

Scope and Content Note

The WJBC Radio Collection consists of eight boxes and 41 folders containing materials ranging from 1924 to 2000.
